Be prepared to have a realistic discussion of the costs of your idea. Make meetings count by making them more about the future than the past. Drucker motivated me to always keep learning, especially when it comes to branding and marketing. Strive to win the big battles. To be honest it's a little overwhelming to read so much great stuff at one place in one post: If you make one distinctive contribution—a key decision that would not have happened without your leadership even if no one ever credits you for your catalytic role—then you will have rendered a great service. Take Care of Your Community. Support the final decision. They are occupied with the efforts rather than results. I gave me the confidence to calendar white space in the morning and to be belligerently reclusive during creative hours.
