Autobulus occurs again in the Dialogue on Love. The Lives of the Twelve Caesars:

The last of these fell desperately in love with Antiope; and, escaping the net, let thus much suffice concerning these matters. He also coined money, and stamped it with the image of an ox, either in memory of the Marathonian bull, or of Taurus, whom he vanquished, or else to put his people in mind to follow husbandry; and from this coin came Edition: A temple is certainly built to his honor on the mount called from him Quirinalis.
