History is not only the occasion as it was in Socrates for the return to the self but the condition for the free human decision to open oneself up to the other and to God, that is, to his action which brings the truth and the condition for understanding it and welcoming it, in short, for deciding. For that same reason, it lives on historical memory and its credo is a his story.

Universitat de Barcelona, Barcelona ; Anna Riera. The enclave of Emporion thus became an active stopover port for Greek commercial ships which from then on strove to carve a niche for themselves in the most active exchange zones with the Iberian communities located on the coastline of the Peninsula. In the second part, which is a bit more systematic, we shall examine the different ways of considering history and contemporaneity that Kierkegaard offers 5 and the different kinds of knowledge that must be distinguished in order to differentiate the Christian faith 6.

It would be very complex to examine the question of to what extent this serves
